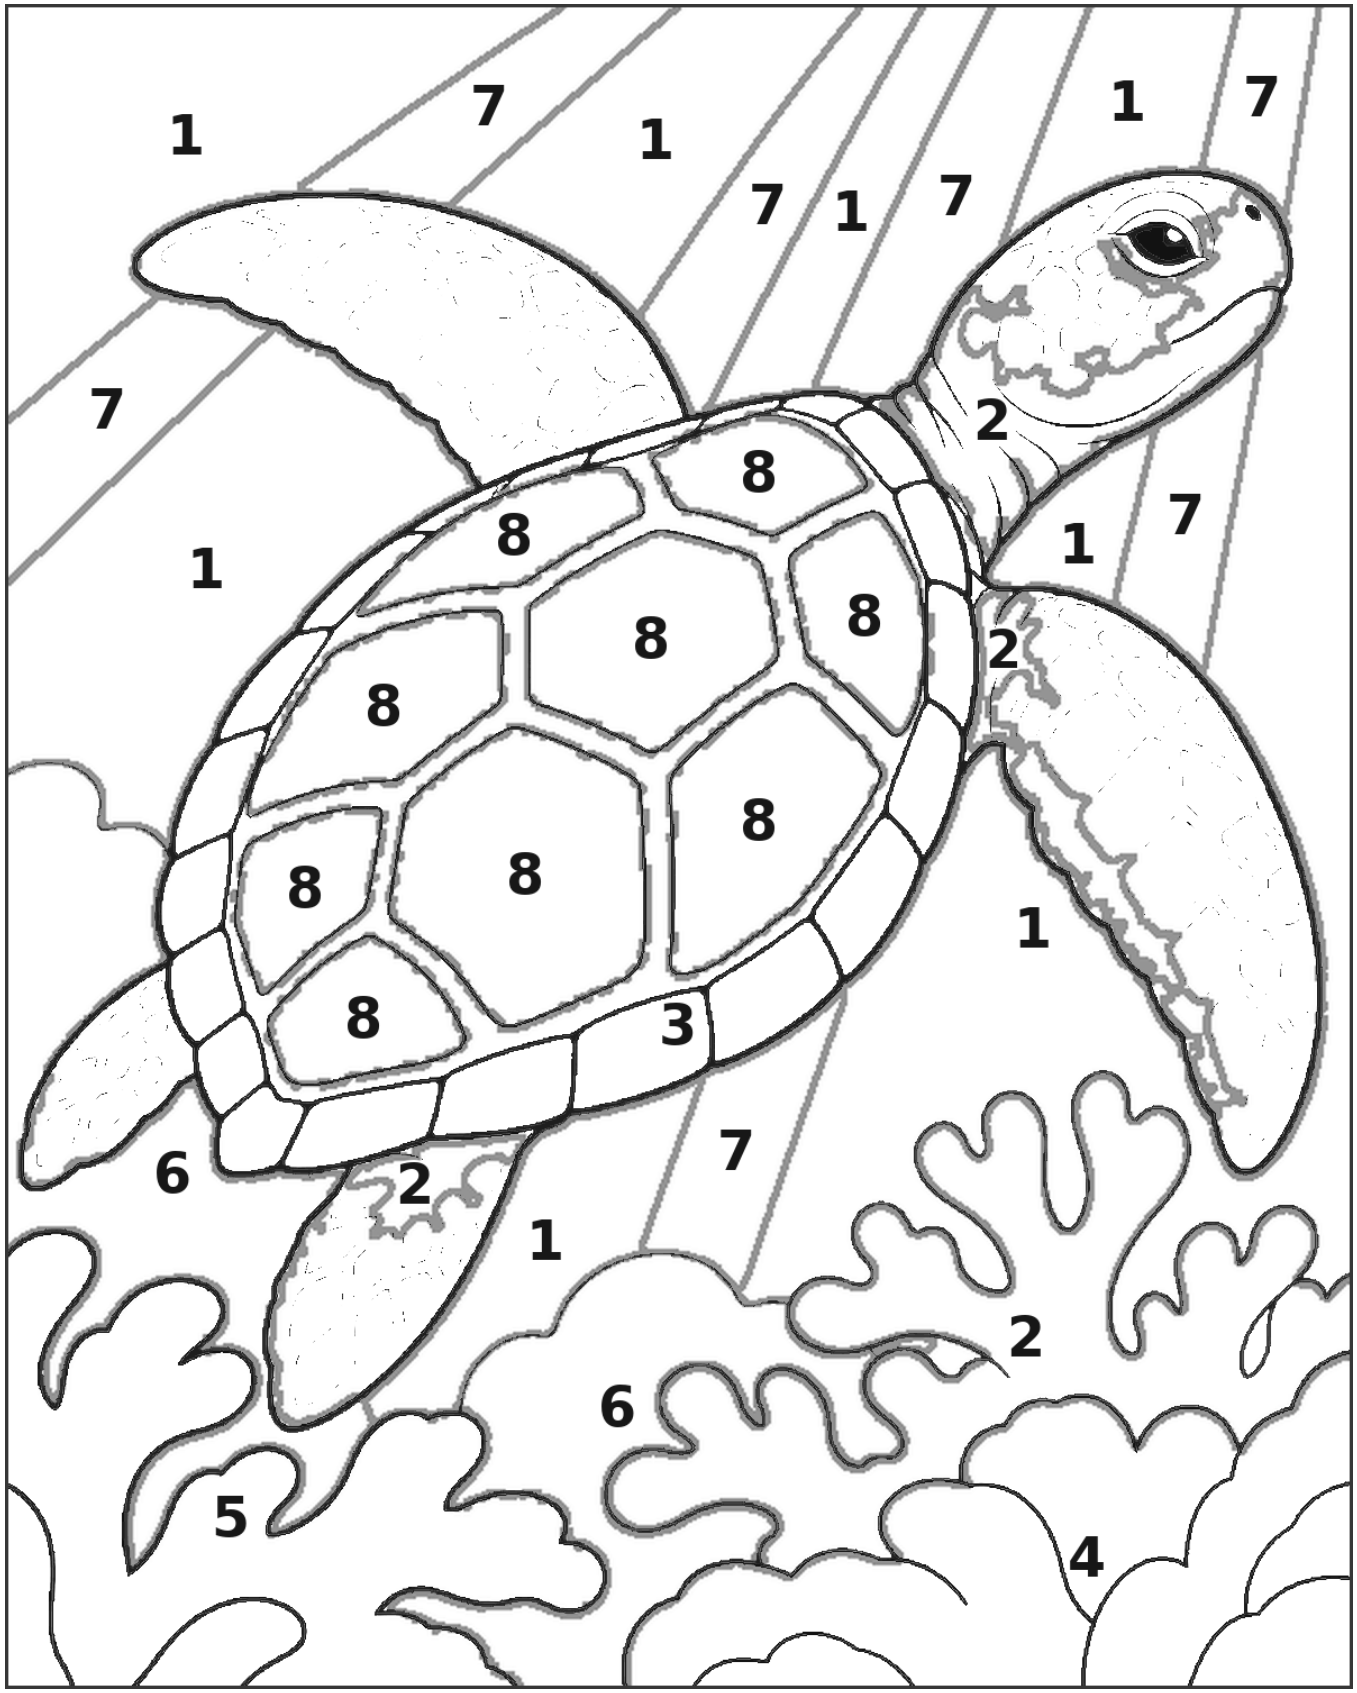
Green Sea Turtle

Why does a sea turtle swim up for air?



Did you know? A green sea turtle has lungs. It can spend a long time underwater, but it must come up to breathe. Its wide front flippers help it pull through the water between trips to the surface.